Senator Wilson on General Grant

Senator Wilson of Masscewstta, communicates to the Independent in artely on the Presidence, from which we quote the following:

The Presidential context of 1808, with its rust iscue, will stir the nation to its profoundest depths. The Democracy, without responsibilities, under the beadership of men of rulent, tact and experience, will put forth a glaritie effort to win back loss power. He Republican party, upon which text responsibilities, has in its ranks able, trind and true men-civil and military—men whose names are honorably associated with the country's struggles for unity and therty. Who among the honored men, of proved capacity and tried fidelity, shall be selected to marshal the Republican bosts to vectory? Whose namination, in advance, in the the examince of vectory doubly sure? Above personal aspirations and ambitions, above out of pide and amolinement, above all association and interests, there comes from the body of the three millions of Republicans to whom the test of and amolinement, above all associations and acceptance of views of the production of the old cause is so dear, the production? These massers we, with the clear instinct of patroid-in, that the great solders would bring into the impendion contest the weight of his great name and illustrious achievements, his solid and practical independent, his conceded integrity, his inducest roat never vinute his own deeds, and his are internancial interest as the contest of the Republicans, in the struggle torough which duty has ted them, have been we should be uniformed, as it is of often his hear by drafts from the most ody need and of the move deed to be runforted, as it so often his hear by drafts from the most ody need and of the Dimocracy, and that the selection of General work of the Contract of the removed of the cause they most love.
